

LEADERSHIP BOOT CAMP 101

FOR C-LEVEL EXECUTIVES, SENIOR LEADERS & DEPARTMENT MANAGERS

“ Everything rises and falls on leadership”

Dr. John Maxwell, #1 Leadership expert

Introduction

Up until a few years ago leadership was not well defined. Many people mistakingly assumed if someone has an impressive title or a position is automatically a leader. True leadership is not about a position or a title but it is only about influence. True leadership can not be assigned, awarded or appointed. It can only be earned through influence. The only thing a position or a title does for a leader is to buy the leaders some time to either influence people or undermine them.

As companies grow, the need for highly trained leaders becomes more important as they become an extension of the founders and the top management to leap the company forward. Many companies rely on managers to maintain systems and processes and expect these managers to also lead. Not all managers are leaders and not all leaders are managers. Understanding this distinction allows leaders with less managerial capabilities to surround themselves with the right team members in order to carry out their company's vision.

The good news is that leadership can be learned in the same way as other skills. Leadership is the foundation for personal growth and development and only through teaching the laws of leadership and applying them, a company can equip employees with the necessary knowledge to influence and motivate others on their team to bring their vision to life.

The Leadership boot camp is designed specifically for companies with the following characteristics:

- Companies where employees are easily stressed out over the company's growth.
- Where companies are losing employees to their competitors.
- Situations where employee morales are low and managers have to constantly encourage and micromanage the people on their team.
- A company is growing so rapidly where leaders are constantly putting out fires instead of being able to focus on leading and being a visionary.
- The revenues have plateaued or are in a decline affecting the bottom line
- Your customers are switching to your competitors and your company is losing its edge
- Customer service trainings have not been effective and employees are not following through
