

How to BUILD a LEADERSHIP TEAM & RUN a COMPANY without going to Office?

Introduction

Up until a few years ago leadership was not well defined. Many people mistakenly assumed if someone has an impressive title or a position is automatically a leader. True leadership is not about a position or a title but it is only about influence. True leadership can not be assigned, awarded or appointed. It can only be earned through influence. The only thing a position or a title does for a leader is to buy him/her some time to either influence people or undermine them.

As companies grow, the need for highly trained leaders becomes more important as they become an extension of the senior management to leap the company forward. Many companies rely on managers to maintain systems and processes and expect these managers to also lead. Not all managers are leaders and not all leaders are managers. Understanding this distinction allows leaders with less managerial capabilities to surround themselves with the right team members in order to carry out their company's vision. A company that is built on the foundation of empowering other leaders to grow and reach their highest potential are the ones that can weather the life's strongest storms and carry forward regardless of external or internal circumstances. But the question is how do you do it? John Maxwell, the #1 leadership expert has summarized these principals in a simple and an easy to understand way for C-Level executives and senior leadership teams and manager to understand to apply in their companies and various departments.
